Week ending October 11, 2024

Last week, equity markets trended upwards, with the S&P 500 continuing to reach record highs, driven by confidence in a strong U.S. economy. Despite rising oil prices, yields, and geopolitical tensions, stocks rebounded after initially falling to start the week. The Consumer Price Index (CPI) report came in slightly above expectations, and Initial Jobless Claims hit a one-year high but may be the temporary result of impacts from Hurricane Helene and the Boeing strike. Bond yields rose, with the 10-year Treasury yield increasing to 4.08% from 3.98%, as markets begin to cool down on expectations of continued aggressive rate cuts from the Federal Reserve and react to strong economic data, such as the Atlanta Fed's Q3 GDP forecast being revised up to 3.2%.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- The yield curve steepened last week with rates 1-year and shorter falling slightly or remaining flat. Interest rates 2-years and longer rose during the week with longer term rates seeing the biggest movements, all rates 10-years or longer rose by 10 bps or more.
- It appears that the yield curve is continuing to normalize, shown by the 2- and 10-year spread expanding from 5 to 13 bps over the course of the week.
- Mortgage rates continued to increase from 6.12% to 6.32% through the week, which will make home affordability more challenging. The recent increases seem to reflect the market's reaction to strong economic news likely suggesting future rate cuts may not be as large or quick as previously expected.

Alternative Markets Overview

- U.S. crude oil prices continued their recent trend upward rising over 1% last week due to concerns of possible disruptions from Hurricane Milton and continuing escalations in the Middle East.
- Gold prices resumed their upward trend for the year posting a 0.3% gain for the week and bringing its YTD performance up to 29.2%. Some analysts are projecting growth could maintain its recent trend upward into 2025 due to geopolitical tensions, election uncertainty, and inflation concerns.
