Week ending July 19, 2024

It was a wild week as stocks swung back and forth beginning with an early-week rally after the attempted shooting of Donald Trump followed by weakness in tech stocks after the week ended with a global IT outage. For a second week in a row, we saw small cap stocks outperform their large cap peers and value outperform growth. Expectations remain high for an upcoming rate cut by the Federal Reserve in September as economic data showed signs of consumer strength, with retail sales numbers surprised to the upside, and slack in the labor market, as initial and continuing jobless claims surprised to the upside.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- Yields rose slightly across the yield curve during the week, however expectations for an impending rate cut remain optimistic.
- The European Central Bank made no change to its key interest rate after an initial rate cut at last month's meeting citing sticky services inflation.
- 30-Year fixed mortgage rates fell to their lowest levels since mid-March, falling mortgage rates and a resilient economy are two positive signs for the housing market. Demand from home buyers remains low as home purchase applications have declined since Spring.

Equity Markets Overview

- After struggles in the technology sector, both the Nasdaq and S&P 500 fell from their record highs and posted losses for the week, while the Dow Jones continued its recent rally and ended the week with a gain.
- For the second week in a row, small cap stocks outperformed their large cap peers (2.2% vs -1.9%, respectively; however, small caps still lag large caps on a year-to-date basis by a wide margin (5.7% vs 16.3%, respectively).
- Across all market cap sizes, value stocks again outpaced their growth peers last week, most notably large cap value outpacing large growth names (0.7% vs -3.8%, respectively). While some are speculating if the rotation from growth to value is building steam, value stocks still lag significantly on a year-to-date basis (8.9% vs 23%, respectively).
- Sectors were mixed as Technology and Communication Services stocks saw the largest weekly declines of 3.63% and 3.46%, respectively. Real Estate, Energy, and Financial Services companies were among the leading sectors with gains of 2.26%, 2.12%, and 1.72%, respectively.
